

From new session, semester system for all LU UG courses

TIMES NEWS NETWORK

Lucknow: The Lucknow University is likely to introduce semester system in its regular undergraduate courses of BA, BSc and BCom from the new academic session. Earlier, it was decided that semester system will be introduced in BSc, but now LU plans to introduce it in all undergraduate courses.

The university already has semester system in post-graduate courses.

Two rounds of meetings of all deans and department heads have already been held.

Another meeting will be held in January end to discuss the modalities of the se-semester system.

“The switch from annual exam pattern to semester system will be helpful for the students. Students will develop understanding of every topic,” said LU vice-chancellor SPSingh. The system will help to impart quality education by dividing the curriculum into two semesters.

“LU could not score well in National Assessment Accreditation Council survey due to outdated curriculum and old examination system. Semester system will only help improve education standard and will also improve the university’s score in the next assessment,” said an LU official.

The biggest drawback of the annual examination system was that students don’t study with sincerity throughout the year and start preparation just before examination.

It will also save time as all UG and PG examinations will be held at the same time.
